

Bibliography of The Loner and The Enforcer, Two Australian Author-Specific Series of Western Novel Magazines

Anders N. Nilsson, Nordmaling, Sweden

[Version 14 April 2026]

INTRODUCTION

My Internet-based bibliographical work on Cleveland Publishing's enormous volume of Australian western books and magazines has so far dealt with the author-mixed series (Nilsson 2026a-d). However, Cleveland did also publish lots of often shorter author-specific series in different ways linked to their other series. One difficulty with many of the author-specific series is the absence of serial numbers on the front covers, making it necessary to have access to the copyright page in order to identify the number of some specific issue. However, some online library catalogues, like the new one from the State Library of New South Wales, do include serial numbers in many of their posts.

I have here selected for study the two series The Loner by Desmond Robert Dunn (1929-2003) writing as Sheldon B. Cole, and The Enforcer by Keith James Hetherington (1929-2021) writing as Kirk Hamilton. Both series were written by Australians, are relatively long, with 26 and 48 titles respectively, and recently republished as eBooks in Europe. The two series also differ in their original publication history. The Loner started directly as a separate series with its own numbering, and the author used the pseudonym Sheldon B. Cole as specific for this series. The correct order of the titles is evident directly from the numbering of the books. The Enforcer, on the other hand got started as a subseries under the long mixed series Cleveland Western, and the author used his more general pseudonym Kirk Hamilton. Before getting its own series, a number of new Enforcer titles were also scattered among Cleveland's shorter mixed series. This publication pattern did create some problems in the reconstruction of the original publication sequence of the titles.

The Loner was reprinted more or less completely twice by Cleveland, whereas only two Australian reprint issues of The Enforcer have come to light. Another important difference is that The Enforcer was translated, at least in part, to three different languages in the Nordic Countries, whereas The Loner remained available only in the original language. The two series also differ in that Blake Durant was the single hero of The Loner, whereas Yance Bannerman in The Enforcer had his sidekick Johnny 'Colt' Cato.

The following national codes are used in the lists: (AU) Australia, (DK) Denmark, (FI) Finland, (NO) Norway, (UK) United Kingdom, and (US) United States. The name of some unique main character is given within parenthesis after title when known. As the studied Cleveland novel magazines lacked printing dates, these were estimated from years given in reprints and the printed price on the front cover. In a few cases date of receivment was found in library catalogues.

Thanks to Jan Ole Braathen, Mark Simunsen and David Whitehead for sharing useful information.

THE LONER

The 26 titles in The Loner series were all first published by Cleveland between 1967 and 1980 in a separate series numbered 201-226. The serial title was given as "The Loner" on the front cover of the first 14 issues, and after that “a Loner western”. The former title is here preferred as given on the title page of all issues. The series was reprinted twice by Cleveland. First in 1989-1990 scattered among their short mixed series, and again in 2008-2009 in a separate series here referred to as “The Loner [II]”. As I am not sure of the number of titles reprinted, I have here only included those seen. Most likely there were more of them. To my knowledge, there are no translated editions based on The Loner series. An overview of the publication history is shown in Table 1.

The British publisher Piccadilly Publishing bought the rights to the Loner series from Cleveland and republished all 26 titles as eBooks. A few titles were also issued through Piccadilly Publishing as audiobooks. Piccadilly sold subsidiary rights to Crowood, who issued seven titles between 2020-2021. These were among the last titles published before Crowood ended its Black Horse Western imprint. However, Crowood also sold the Large Print rights in those seven titles to the Ulverscroft Group, and these Large Print editions were issued between 2023-2024 under Ulverscroft's Linford Western Library imprint. Finally, Piccadilly sold all their Loner rights to the Australian publisher Echo Books who, in 2024, issued a second series of eBooks (Des Dunns Westerns 2026).

THE ENFORCER

The Enforcer series got started as a subseries of Cleveland Western in 1974 including also a few titles scattered among Cleveland Publishing's other mixed series. After 16 titles The Enforcer got its own series Enforcer Western, numbered from 233 to 264 in the years 1976-1979. The only two Australian reprints seen are Cleveland Classic #239 and 249 from about 1996. The here suggested publication order of all 48 titles is shown in Table 2. In 1978-1981 the Danish Winther publisher reprinted 32 of the 48 titles in the Bannerman & Colt series (Olsen 2026). In 2016-2018 Lindhardt og Ringhof published 29 of these Danish paperbacks as eBooks (Bog&idé 2026). Nine titles were in Norway included in the Pocketbokforlaget's Bannerman & Colt series in 1980-1981. At least two titles were published in Finland 1980-1982, in the Colt and Lännensarja series (Kivimäki 2026). In 1980 also two double volume paperbacks were published in USA by Leisure Books. Finally, in 2016-2020 the British Piccadilly Publishing republished all 48 titles as eBooks after buying the rights from Cleveland Publishing.

Appendix 1: Front covers of selected editions of The Loner and The Enforcer are shown on four plates, favouring covers not so easily found on the Internet. Almost all Loner editions have covers based on the same artwork as the first edition. The Echo Books reproduce the original covers unmodified (see the Des Dunn Westerns homepage), with the exception of their first title that uses a reprint cover. Most other editions have changed the layout. Cleveland's 2nd reprint editions mixed original and new paintings on their covers, and the Linford Westerns have photographic covers.

The Enforcer original paintings were with few exceptions re-used with new layout on both the Danish paperbacks and eBooks (see Gunnar Olsens homepage and the one of the Danish book seller Bog&idé), as well as on the British eBooks (see Piccadilly's homepage). The short Norwegian edition used completely different paintings, and so did also the Finnish and American pair of books.

Plate 1: Front cover of the very first book of the original Loner edition together with eight covers from Cleveland's 2nd reprint series.

Plate 2: Five British Loner book front covers, of which three are from Black Horse Westerns and two from Linford Westerns. The four foreign Enforcer covers include two from Finland together with the two American double volumes from Leisure Books.

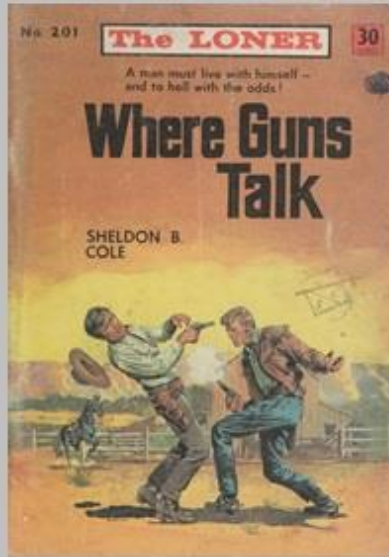

Plate 3: A selection of front covers from the first edition of the Enforcer series. Six are from Enforcer Western, two from Cleveland Western, and one from Santa Fe Western.

Plate 4: All nine front covers from the Norwegian edition of the Bannerman & Colt series. On three of the books, the series is recommended by a Norwegian football goal keeper famous at the time.
